The diagram illustrates a window blind system. It features a central control cord that runs vertically through the middle of the blind. The blind is composed of 15 horizontal slats, which are arranged in a repeating pattern of light gray and white. The top and bottom slats are shown in a tilted position, indicating that the blind is partially open. The blind is supported by two side rails, one on each side, which are connected to the central cord. A small black triangle is visible on the right side rail, pointing downwards, which likely indicates the direction of movement for the blind.
